Five thousand years ago, a civilization began that was to bring the world knowledge of writing and numbers, of architecture and law. In a time of superstition and darkness, its people founded the science of astronomy and metallurgy; in a land of unbroken plains, its people worshiped man-made gods. Ancient Mesopotamia remained as one of the most influential civilization. They built cities, used potter's wheel, developed writing, and developed a complex bureaucratic system, laid out law and used metals. Get this from a library!
